The volume includes many studies describing various populations VBAs concerning natural resources and their management. The concept of attitude has been one of the most pervasive topics not just in social psychology, but in the human dimensions of natural resources (Manfredo and others 2004). Attitudes have been measured not just to help describe the views of different stakeholder groups or types of recreation visitors, but to predict behavior and test hypotheses about relationships among values, beliefs, attitudes, and behavior. Values have also been studied extensively in the human dimensions of natural resources (Manfredo and others 2004). Many human dimensions researchers have adopted Rokeachs definition of values as basic, evaluative beliefs about appropri-ate modes of conduct and desired end states (Manfredo and others 2004: 275). Note that this definition of values also incorporates the evaluative element of...
