Every Sunday they were driven into the church of St. Angelo, to hear a sermon on the crimes of their forefathers and their own depravity and hardness of heart. All trade was forbidden to them except in old clothes, rags, and what we know as marine stores. They were ground into the dust by taxes and confiscations of every kind, and to procure the slightest alleviation of their sufferings were compelled to pay large sums to their oppressors. It was only under the reign of Pius ix. that they were relieved from some of the most degrading of these indignities. Notwithstanding the filth and overcrowding of the Ghetto, and though it is inundated almost every year by the overflowing of the Tiber, yet it is the least unhealthy quarter of Rome. It suffers far less from the malaria than the neighbourhood of the Pincian,...
