B-278232 It is critically important during the Year 2000 effort that agencies protect System Interfaces Need against the potential for introducing and propagating errors from one More Attention organization to another and ensure that interfacing systems have the ability to exchange data through the transition period. According to our, to address the issue of interfaces, agencies Year 2000 Assessment Guide should (1) identify their internal and external interfaces, (2) determine the need for data bridges and filters, (3) notify outside data exchange partners of their interface plans, (4) test their interface correction strategies, and (5) develop contingency plans that address the possibility of failing to s Year DOD receive data from an external source or receiving invalid data. 2000 Management Plan places responsibility on component heads or their designated Year 2000 points of contact to document and obtain system interface agreements in the form of memorandums of agreement or the equivalent. DOD Since October 1996, the Air Force has participated in six high-level Year 2000 interface workshops, including finance, intelligence, command and control, communications, logistics, and weapons systems. However, to date, the Air Force has not been tracking (1) how its components are going about identifying their interfaces, (2) how they plan to correct interfaces, and (3) whether they are instituting memorandums of agreement in order to communicate their interface plans to their data exchange partners. It is important for the Air Force to immediately begin tracking these issues since individual components...
